CRYPTO CURRENCY

Cryptos can go up, but they can also go down. Like, right down. If you're wondering why, here are a few factors influencing those prices.

What influences cryptocurrency value? The first thing that comes to mind is demand. The higher the demand, the higher the price and vice versa. For cryptocurrency, several factors influence how the price fluctuates.

PRODUCTION COST

The production cost is another factor that influences cryptocurrency value. Every day, miners use specialized hardware or servers to produce new tokens and verify new network transactions. Miners are rewarded with virtual tokens and a network fee for their efforts.

CRYPTO EXCHANGES

If a token is available on a large number of crypto exchanges, it increases the number of people buying and using that token. If you need two or more exchanges to swap any cryptocurrency token, you will pay a fee for each swap, raising the investment cost.

CRYPTO COUNT

The node count shows how many active wallets exist in the same network. You can easily find this information by simply making a Google search or checking the currency homepage.

GOVERNMENT REGULATION

Certain governments do not appreciate cryptocurrency's decentralized and unregulated character, so look for ways to control the crypto market.
